4 Sponsors Quit Council of American-Soviet Friendship

NEW YORK. — National Council of American-Soviet Friendship announced withdrawal of four prominent sponsors, three of whom attributed their resignations to disagreement with activities of the council.

Richard Morfitt, executive director of the council, said those who resigned were Harold L. Ickes, former secretary of the Interior; Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.); Judge Learned Hand of the United States circuit court of appeals; and William L. Batt, former vice chairman of war production board.

In a letter, Ickes told the council that "considerable variance exists between our points of view with respect to certain matters affecting Russia."

Great Britain's First Jet

Flying Post Fighter Ready

LONDON. — Saunders Roe, Ltd., aircraft manufacturer, said that Britain's first jet propelled flying boat fighter, believed to be the first such plane in the world, soon will be ready for flight. A single seater powered by two jet motors inclosed in the hull, the plane will be armed with four 20 millimeter cannon in the nose. The pilot's cabin will be pressurized and equipped with a device to eject the pilot.

How women and girls may get wanted relief from functional periodic pain

Cardui is a liquid medicine which many women say has brought relief from the cramps, pain, and nervousness of functional periodic pain. It's the only medicine that's been shown to be safe and effective for women.

1. It should stimulate the uterus to contract and expel the blood clots which cause the pain.

2. Started 3 days before "your time," it will ease the pain and prevent it from coming back.

Mikado Grants

Japan Charter

Strips Emperor of Power and

Outlaws War; Human Rights Provided For.

TOKYO. — Scrapping of the 57-year-old imperial constitution and substitution of a new charter outlawing war, stripping the emperor of his power and providing for human rights unprecedented in Japanese law, were announced recently by Emperor Hirohito.

Clad in silken robes, the emperor "reported" to his ancestral gods enshrined in the imperial palace sanctuary that he was shedding his political power and would become a mere figurehead under the new constitution effective six months hence. Then he adopted "emperor's uniform" and appeared before the diet in a 15 minute ceremony. For the first time his voice reached millions of Japanese homes in a "live" and unrecorded broadcast over a national network.

Hirohito asked his "fellow citizens" to join him in building a nation "tempered by a sense of moderation and responsibility and dedicated to freedom and peace."

The constitution takes away the emperor's status as sacred head of the state and the highest military power. It makes him only a "symbol of state and of the unity of the people." He has no political power. He cannot receive gifts unless the diet approves. He must confine his activities to specified ceremonial and formal functions.

A chapter headed "The Rights and Duties of the People" includes guarantees against illegal arrest of properly constituted courts, of the secrecy of mail, of inviolable property rights, of freedom of faith, speech, writing, publication and assembly, and of the right to submit petitions.

The diet is recognized as the "highest organ of the state." The diet is permitted to select the premier, previously appointed by the emperor, after a board of elder statesmen had made their recommendations. It can conduct investigations and impeach judges. In addition the lower house can compel any government to resign by refusing a vote of confidence.

The two houses of parliament changed about 500 words of the original charter draft approved by General MacArthur. One of the major changes dealt with the nobility. The revised clause states flatly that the peerage "shall not be recognized."

The chapter renouncing war, rewritten by the house of representatives, declares that the Japanese nation yields its sovereign right to wage war and to maintain armed forces or any war potential.

Amnesty Granted.

The constitution, the second in Japanese history, contains 100 articles. The first constitution was drafted 57 years ago by Hirohito's grandfather, Emperor Meiji.

Meanwhile, a general amnesty expected to free thousands of prisoners, including political cases charged with "lese majeste," went into effect.

Throughout the country Japanese celebrated publication of the constitution with mass rallies, athletic, dramatics, oratorical and poetry contests, goshu performances and processions. Special rations of cake and wine were issued. The emperor and his family attended a rally of 20,000 Tokyo citizens in the park plaza.
